How to use this directory

This directory contains listings for sawmills, dry kilns and lumber treaters. The master listings contain production figures and processing details. A simple alphabetical listing of sawmills, dry kilns and treaters (including each index number) is located on pages 25 - 27.

Each sawmill is listed in alphabetical order by county. Each firm name is preceded by an index number. The Sawmill Processing Index and the Sawmill Product Index (pages 28 and 29) identify firms by index number only.

Each kiln and treater is listed in alphabetical order. Each firm name is preceded by an index number.

A list of forest industry organizations and additional sources of public assistance has also been included.

Introduction

Massachusetts forest area has generally been expanding since the mid-1800's. Sixty-four percent of the total land area of the Commonwealth is forest. Approximately 6% of the total forestland is not timberland. This 6% represents land that is reserved from timber production, is non-productive, or is urban forest. "Timberland," land capable of producing timber, covers 2,929,400 acres or 58.5% of the Commonwealth's land area.

The Massachusetts sawtimber inventory is increasing.² Softwood sawtimber volumes increased from 3,809.8 million board feet (mmbf) to 5,635 mmbf between 1972 and 1985. This represents an increase of 48% over 13 years and a 3% compound interest growth rate. Hardwood sawtimber volumes increased 66% (from 3,507.1 to 5,821.6 mmbf), a 4% compound annual growth rate. These increases in volume occurred even though an average of about 130 mmbf of timber was removed annually.

Most of the timber cut in Massachusetts is also sawn by mills in this state. A portion of the annual harvest is imported from adjoining states and a portion exported to out-of-state and Canadian sawmills and veneer mills.

The 1990 sawmill survey showed 100 Massachusetts sawmills producing 112,502 mmbf annually. A few sawmills listed in the 1987 Massachusetts Primary Wood Products Industry Directory are no longer in business and a few new sawmills are listed in this 1993 directory. Current annual lumber production (112.5 mmbf) represents a reduction from 145 mmbf reported in 1986. Interestingly, current annual lumber production is very close to the annual harvest of 125 mmbf reported in a 1957 survey of Massachusetts sawmills.¹

This 1993 Sawmill, Dry Kiln and Lumber Treater Directory lists 94 sawmills, 17 dry kilns, and 5 lumber treatment facilities. Three sawmills asked to remain unlisted at this time.

The 14 largest sawmills produce 51% of the lumber; the 34 largest producers account for 85% of the total annual lumber production. The sawmills in Worcester County produce more than any other county (Figure 1). The four western counties account for 61% of the state's total lumber production, the five western counties 81%.

According to the 1990 survey, softwood lumber production amounts to 53% of total production (Figure 2) and white pine more than 78% of the softwood lumber component (Figure 3). Forty-seven percent of annual lumber production is hardwood; red oak is the single most important hardwood lumber species.
